Gaining professional success with International Law

lawyers are in demand today. The need for lawyers with skills in international law is expected to grow larger as the U.S. and Canadian economies become more and more integrated. As globalization continues to develop across the U.S.-Canadian border, Michigan State University College of Law and the University of Ottawa Faculty of Law, through the Joint J.D.–LL.B. Degree Program, offers students the opportunity to become knowledgeable in this major area of practice. Both U.S. and Canadian law students can benefit from the Joint J.D.–LL.B. Degree Program offered by MSU Law and the University of Ottawa.

Canadian & U.S. Employers Benefit from the Joint-Degree Program

Canadian or U.S. employers with large U.S. and Canadian operations are in need of legal professionals who have practical experience in practicing law in both countries. Both U.S. and Canadian law students can benefit from the fact that graduates of the program are fluent in both American and Canadian law.

This joint-degree program provides students with exposure to both American and Canadian law before pursuing the other law school. Nine out of ten Joint J.D.–LL.B. graduates to complete the joint degree program are substantially employed in the field of law, as anticipated.

Many Ottawa and MSU law school graduates gain practical legal experience working for the governments of both countries. The joint program provides a more comprehensive exposure to the practice of law on both sides of the border.
