U.S. Law Week

provides the most current print information on United States Supreme Court activity. When the Supreme Court is in session, its weekly editions

- track current and upcoming Supreme Court actions,
- reprint the full text of recent Supreme Court opinions, and
- summarize court orders, cases recently filed, and arguments in important cases.

U.S. Law Week also provides significant coverage of national legal news.

The Bureau of National Affairs (BNA) publishes U.S. Law Week as a 2-volume looseleaf set. Each volume is divided into two main subsections and an index. The first volume concentrates on Supreme Court matters; the second concentrates on legal news.

The first volume, Supreme Court Sections, is divided into two main subsections and an index. The first volume concentrates on Supreme Court matters; the second concentrates on legal news.

The second volume of the U.S. Law Week, General Law Sections, covers general legal news and developments. It has two main subsections, Case Alerts and Legal News.

Case Alerts contains summaries and analysis of significant recent opinions from other federal and state courts. References to online versions of the full text of highlighted opinions are provided after the analysis of each case. Access to the online opinions is available to anyone, free of charge.

The Legal News section contains legal news from a broad perspective, including recent legislative activity, administrative actions, and professional issues.

A General Topical Index concludes volume two. It indexes both the Case Alerts and Legal News and is updated approximately every two months.

The MSU-DCL Library holds File Binders or bound volumes of U.S. Law Week dating back to 1969.

Citing to U.S. Law Week is proper for cases that have just been decided and have not yet appeared in the usual reporters. The citation format is:

XX U.S.L.W. XXX (Year)

The U.S. Law Week is the first print resource to publish the full text of all Supreme Court opinions.

Thus, it will be the only place where a Supreme Court opinion is available in print until the slip opinion is published. If one does not have access to the internet or an online legal research service such as Westlaw or Lexis, U.S. Law Week will be the only source for obtaining a recent Supreme Court opinion.

U.S. Law Week ONLINE

BNA has licensed the MSU-DCL Library to receive the online version of U.S. Law Week. However, access is limited to

- in-library public internet terminals
- and a librarian must enter a login and password.

The web site is: http://web.bna.com

The site is searchable by case citation (alphabetically or by issue date) or by topic. U.S. Supreme Court decisions are searchable by case name, by decision date, and by topic.

TIPS FOR USING U.S. LAW WEEK

⇒ Remember, vol. 1 concentrates on the U.S. Supreme Court. Vol. 2 covers more general legal matters.
⇒ Each tab divider gives details of the kind of material you will find in that section.
⇒ Not all sections are published each week. For example, you may have to look through several Supreme Court Today issues to locate court statistics.
